APPENDIX I

LETTERS FROM CARLYLE TO CRABB ROBINSON¹

Haddington, 29th April 1825.

(1) My dear Sir,—Knowing by repeated experience² your readiness to oblige, I make no scruple of applying to you in the present emergency, more especially as it relates to a department of business in which you take a deep interest for its own sake.

I have been engaged with an Edinburgh Bookseller to prepare three or perhaps four volumes of Translations from the German intended as specimens of their chief novel writers, with Prefaces, Lives, and Criticisms, and all the addenda which may serve to procure them a good-natured reception from the English public. My acquaintance with this branch of German literature is small, for it does not stand by any means in the highest favour with me, yet I calculate pretty confidently on being able to select a handful of sound wheat from the loads of chaff which I have yet examined only on the surface; and being naturally anxious to effect this as perfectly as possible, I have determined on soliciting the benefit of your knowledge and taste to aid me in my choice. The Bookseller leaves me unlimited freedom; he has no information on the subject, and few counsellors by whose light it were safe to walk. So far as I can judge his chief dependence seems to be on the Volksmärchen and Rittererzählungen of our neighbours; on Musäus, La Motte Fouqué, Lafontaine, and the other ‘mob of gentlemen’ who wrote for the venerable Plebs of the reading community. I dislike these people, but must not altogether neglect them. For the sake of popularity independent of merit, I must try to get a specimen or two from each of these notable personages; but my chief dependence is placed on Tieck, Richter, Wieland, and Goethe. From the last I have already determined to take Werter, Melusine, and what you told me Schlegel called the Mährchen aller Mährchen.¹ In Wieland, I think, I shall find an article or two in the Hexameron von Rosenhain or elsewhere, valuable more for its author's than its own qualities, but giving room for some discussion on that topic and therefore useful for me. Of Richter I yet know little; I have looked into his Herbstbuminen [sic], his Flegeljahre, and am now reading his Fibel. It is easy to see already that next to Goethe (and Tieck?) he is the best man in Germany; but his extravagance and barbarism will render the task of selecting from him one of some difficulty. The Phantasien which you lent me are all I know of Tieck; but I must if possible have him included in my list, and some of his smaller tales I hope will give me the opportunity. There is also one Hoffmann whose Elixiere des Teufels was translated last year in Edinburgh (with small success) concerning whom I could like to have some further information. As to Claurens [sic], with his Scherz und Ernst, I have got the book beside me, but put no faith in it.

² There had not been much time. Crabb Robinson first made Carlyle's acquaintance on June 22nd 1824.

Now, my dear sir, could you of your own knowledge, or by consulting with any of your German friends, afford me advice in this matter? Could you learn for me which is Lafontaine's best novel in one moderate volume? I have read his Raphael (in French), his Rudolph von Werdenberg, and his Tinchen (in German): there is genius in all of these; but whether any of them is among the best of his half-a-century of works, I have no means of ascertaining. Do you know the character of his Sagen aus dem Alterthume and his Kleine Romane? What is Tieck's best novel? La Motte Fouqué's best novel or novels of the small sort? Is it Ondine [sic]? This they wish me to translate, thinking it badly done at present, but after reading the original, I despise it a good deal. Can you tell me which is the Baroness La Motte Fouqué's best? None of her little Tales are good: I must give a specimen both of her and her husband, but I wish to make them very short, for they are intrinsically very slender people.

In Edinburgh are several handsome collections of German books, to most or all of which I have obtained or shall obtain access, particularly to that in the Advocates' Library, one of the most numerous if not the best selected in the Kingdom. Still the quantity of books I shall have access to, compared with the quantity I should wish to read before making a final choice is inconsiderable; and as buying on the great scale is out of the question, I am anxious to have the range of my examination narrowed before commencing. For this purpose I put no small trust in you. I doubt not you will give me minutely your own thoughts on the matter; and transmit me those of your German friends in whose judgment you most rely. Has not Mrs. Aders (the lady who lent me Wilhelm Meister) great skill in such things? So great is my confidence in your goodness that if you could readily procure me a loan of any quantity of books likely to be of use to me, I should not hesitate to ask you to take the trouble of sending them for my perusal and criticism: consigned to a Bookseller in London, they might with the greatest ease and speed be sent to my Bookseller in Edinburgh, and thence to my abode. This seems a strange proposal, but when I look at your Don Quixote and Quevedo, I hardly think it stranger than your kindness of disposition. At all events, I count on your favouring me with your advice, the first hour you have leisure. I make no apologies for the trouble I am giving you, but I hope I shall not feel the obligation the less on that account. If you write within a week after this arrives (which would be very desirable), please to direct to No. 18 Salisbury Street, Edingh; if not till after that, it will be safer to say: Mainhill, Ecclefechan, Dumfries-shire, where I am to be all summer.

In a short while I mean to send you one of those Schillers that you may send it to Goethe: then I shall try to write less drily. At present I must stick to the naked point of business, and even this I can hardly yet handle in intelligible terms: crowds of people are about me. I must pray you to make the best of it, and to believe me always, with true esteem,

My dear sir,

Most faithfully yours,

THOMAS CARLYLE.

(2) My dear Sir,—It is long since I ought to have thanked you for your friendly and prompt answer to my last inquiries: and I do so now with no very good grace, when I have a new favour to ask of you. The Book of German Novelists, concerning which I took your advice last spring, is actually in the Press: after much loitering, groping, consulting, and passive and active meditating, I at last fixed upon my men, began printing last January, and am in hopes of being rid of the affair, if you can help me out of this strait in which I am for the present entangled.

I am to have four volumes; two names in each of the first three; and Goethe's Wilhelm Meisters Wanderjahre is to occupy the fourth. Of these, the first and the last and half of the second are already printed. Musäus, Fouqué, Tieck: Goethe with lives and so forth; Hoffmann, Jean Paul, and Maler Müller² are still desiderated. And like to be so, unless you can lend me a hand; for the original works are not to be had in any shop of this Island; and though I have sent for them both to Leipzig and Hamburg, and the invoice from Fleischer in the former of these book-marts reached me about a month ago, no glimpse of the ware itself has yet come to light, not even a probability when it is to be looked for. You will conceive the nodus of the case when I tell you that in ten days unless some Deus intersit, Ballantyne with all his Devils will be at a stand.

Of Hoffmann, I have a piece besides me that would answer, one of his Fantasiestücke in Callots Manier; but I want much to see his Leben und Nachlass, or any even the slenderest account of his life; being ignorant at present even of the date of its termination.

¹ 'It has been far the worst and the most troublesome of them all.' Letter to John Carlyle, May 1826. Early Letters, Norton, 1887.

² His works remained unobtainable and were not included among Carlyle's translations.

With Jean Paul, also, I could contrive at a dead lift to 'help myself through'; on the faith of your recommendation I sent for Schmelzle's Reise and also for the Leben Q[uintus] Fixlein, with a Biography of the Illustrious Dead himself; the former works I suppose are on the road at present, but as for Biographies, Fleischer declares that though two höchst interessante Lives of Jean Paul are in the Press, no life whatever of him has yet come out of it. Nevertheless I have got the Picnic und Dejeuner dansant zu Kuhschnappel of Richter here, and if no better might be, with this I could serve my turn. The death of Richter, among many deep feelings of sadness which it excites in me, affects me likewise with this very mean inconvenience, that I should and cannot give some more precise account of his life. The date of his death even is not known to me. This, however, surely might be learned.¹

But with regard to Maler Müller I confess myself totally helpless. This Müller is a person whom I do not recollect having heard you mention. Maler (Painter) is the agnomen by which he is commonly designated, though he has two Christian names besides. Richter, Horn, and other Aesthetic gentlemen speak in high terms of him; and an intelligent Hamburger² whom I met with last summer recommends him with panegyrics almost rapturous. In short, I have come to regard this Maler Müller as an indispensable personage; and to believe that I cannot with a safe conscience present my Seven Champions of Germany to the English unless he be among the number. It seems he was a contemporary of Goethe in early days, and published various choice pieces about the period of Werter; but afterwards forsook poetry for painting, in the but moderately successful pursuit of which he died some months ago at Rome. His Literary works (Maler Müller's Sämmtliche Werke, 3 Bände, 8^o) are mentioned in Fleischer's catalogue, as published at Heidelberg in 1811; since which time it would appear they have met with quite a new reception; and says my Hamburg correspondent, 'it is even thought that had he continued to cultivate poetry, he might have all but equalled Goethe himself!'

Forgive me these horrid blots, it is a chance to which the finest Calligrapher is exposed when his pen has been six weeks on duty and his ink become a syrup.

Now you can easily figure how gladly I would buy these three volumes; borrow them, beg them, nay, almost steal them; so any one of these four modes of appropriation could bring them into my hand. As I have no late catalogue of any London German Bookseller, it seems barely possible that Bonte, widow Boosey, Black, or some of these people may have the article in their possession. Nay, failing this, who knows but your Mrs. Aders or some other of your German friends may have it in their library, and be prevailed upon for the sake of helping a disconsolate Author out of this Slough of Despond, to let him have it for a week or two in his extreme need? If you can possibly do anything for me, I know you will do it; if not, why then we must just summon our Christian fortitude, and await in meekness and humility the chances of wind and weather. I will tell you again what I want:

(1) Hoffmann's (C. T. A.) Leben und Nachlass, or any account of his life, even the date of his decease.

(2) Richter's Schmelzle and Quintus Fixlein and the same thing about his life.

(3) Maler Müller's Werke, with, if possible, the like appendage.

The first of these works would enable me to go on for the matter of four weeks; by which time, it is likely enough, the Leipzig package may have arrived; the last would enable me in some measure to make ends meet without its arrival; the whole three would elevate me on the 'Rock of Necessity,' from which I might snap my fingers in the face of all chances whatsoever.

I confess, my dear Sir, I have very little hope that it will be in your power to accomplish aught for me in this difficulty: yet when I have tried you, I am at the very end of my resources; at which point, as you know, it is much easier to rest in patience than at any nearer one. So I trespass once more on your [good]¹ nature, still trusting, though feebly. If you succeed in getting any of these books, and can leave them with C. Tait, Bookseller, Sign of Horace's Head, 63 Fleet Street, he will send them directly to his brother in Edinburgh, who is my Bookseller in this adventure. The Fleet Street Tait will, of course, purchase, that is, pay the books, if purchasing or paying avail: but this I doubt much.

At all events I shall gain a letter from you, by this attempt I am making; and that will amply repay the trouble it costs me. I have not forgotten the still Temple, nor Alsatia, nor the kind Philosopher that dwells there. When you see this book, I hope you will find that your advices have not been quite thrown away on me; and here and there a little trait will remind you of our dialogues over coffee and Sally Lunns. I have a note about Nicolai and Philisters, to which I would gladly have appended an acknowledgment to the proper quarter, had I been authorized.

Literary news, news of yourself, news of all kinds, are a scarcity with me here. For many months after leaving you I lay as if in the Castle of Indolence; stretched under whispering beeches reading German, smoking Orinocco, and one of the lordliest prospects in the world spread out at my feet; Skiddaw, Saddleback, Helvellyn, and all these everlasting hills for my background, the silver water of the Solway in front, my time slipped smoothly away, divided into two portions like Lafontaine's l'une se passait à dormir, l'autre à ne rien faire. I am grown a little healthier and much happier, but I am still as recluded as ever. If you can let me hear afar off the tumult of the Brick Universe, its sound will be welcome to me; for there is much in your Babylon that I like, and hope to revisit under kinder auspices. Believe me always,

My dear Sir,

Most faithfully yours,

THOMAS CARLYLE.

I have a long row of Spanish books now in my eye; for which my conscience many a time reproves me. I will send them when I go to Edinburgh; sooner if you require them.

What has become of Coleridge and his book of Aids? Where loiter the sweet singers of England, that no twang of a melodious string is heard throughout the Isle, nothing but the chink of yellow bullion? Alas! We are all Philistines together. But veniet dies!

Edinburgh, 21 Cornhill Bank, 14th May 1827.

(3) My dear Sir,—May I beg of you to accept this copy of my last Compilation in the furtherance of which you more than once showed yourself so ready to assist with Rath und That; a service which I would willingly convince you that I have not forgotten, however unable to do more than remember it. The Book has been out for some time, and your copy should have been sent sooner; but Late is better than Never; and I still hope you will accept the little gift in good part, and sometimes think of me with favour when you see it in your shelves.

I have got some Spanish books of yours, a Don Quixote and a Quevedo, which I still keep in spite of the reproaches of my conscience, now really getting rather bored on the subject. The truth is the volumes are not by me at this moment, but in Dumfries-shire; and my only consolation is that they are safe, and that your need of them is not pressing. I am ashamed to say that I have yet read far too little of them, or indeed of any Spanish work, though some late German translations from that language (particularly one of Calderon) have not a little strengthened my wish to become immediately acquainted with it. One is so busy, so laboriously idle! It will be long before I write aught worth reading, and yet I must not let my pen grow altogether rusty, and so my reading is too much curtailed.

I have got wedded ¹ since I wrote last: my wife also is a reader and a lover of German; and we have a pleasant cottage here with China roses and the like, and the towers of Edinburgh peering through the branches of our tree, at a safe distance. Would not the best way to get your books be to come hither in vacation time and seek them? I am sure it would be the surest; and we could form as pretty a bureau d'intelligence for the discussion of aesthetic matters here, as you would wish to see. There is a spare bed, too, and coffee worthy of King's Bench Walk itself. Oh, I would give a shilling to see one other Sally Lunn! But the Temple with its reverend alleys, and good inmates, is become a reminiscence; and London, huge, monstrous London itself, looks beautiful by distance. Surely I shall once more see it, and the chosen men that make it worth seeing.

A letter from you, full of news of all sorts, would be a treat to be remembered. Some sultry noon, when your streets approach the first degree of Wedgwood, and you cannot stir abroad, for being broiled, who knows but you may favour me? I really should receive it as a most kind service. At all events if I can assist you in aught here, or in any way manifest my sense of obligation to you, I shall expect to be applied to.

Believe me always, my dear Sir,

Most faithfully yours,

T. CARLYLE.

I have more than once meditated inquiring of you about that 'London University,' of yours. I learn from the Newspapers that the people have advertised for Professors; but never having seen the advertisement itself, the offers they have made, the persons to be applied to, in short, the whole aspect of this matter is unknown to me. If you know, or can learn aught throwing light on it, I should be thankful to hear you; for certain of my friends are clear that I should make application for a post in that new Seminary; and, indeed to myself it seems that some Moral Philosophy or Rhetoric Professorship there would be no such unhandsome appointment. I can teach Mathematics also, and Physics (Physic, alas! I know practically) and touches of Metaphysics, the oddest mixture of Scotch and German, Dugald Stewart and Immanuel Kant! But the fittest place for me would be that of 'Jack of all Trades,' in case they wanted such a hand. Seriously I should like to know.

APPENDIX II

EXCERPTS FROM LETTERS OF CRABB ROBINSON TO THE REV. JOHN MILLER, BOCKLETON VICARAGE, TENBURY WELLS

[By permission of Miss Emma Hutchinson]

(1) JULY 4th 1850. [A leaflet about the meeting at Justice Coleridge's which resolved to raise a subscription to do honour to the memory of Wordsworth and determined the objects of the subscription. It gives the names of the Committee and of the Executive Sub-committee and a preliminary list of subscribers. On the back is a letter to John Miller, written from Bury. Crabb Robinson says he is on the sub-committee not by his own act.]

. . . I here content myself with saying that Dr. Chr. Wordsworth is now at Rydal, preparing under Mrs. Wordsworth's eye a memoir of our departed friend, and that The Recluse, part one, is to appear forthwith. . . . In the 5th volume of Southey's Life, there is a brief notice of our old friend E[lton] H[amond] but without anything to betray his name, and indeed very little to draw attention to the fact.

(2) DEC. 1st 1850.

(3) OCT. 4th 1852. . . . There comes into play a sentiment which dear Charles Lamb felt intensely and expressed as he did every[thing] with an enriching humour. I carried him an invitation to drive with a common friend. 'There will be only the three Stansfelds.' 'How I hate those three Stansfelds.' 'Hate them! Why, they are three Yorkshiremen. You have never seen one of them.' 'That's the reason! I cannot hate any one I have ever seen.' I used to say to Charles Lamb: 'I will adopt your pets, but not your antipathies.' . . .

(4) NOV. 24th 1852.

(5) JAN. 14th 1853. . . . The better half of this letter . . . consists of a copy and remarks on the most marvellous poem [The Bridge of Sighs by T. Hood] I have met with of late years. . . .

. . . Of all the men of genius I ever knew, Charles Lamb was the one I most intensely loved.—My love proves nothing, but he was loved with equal warmth coupled with like admiration by Thomas Clarkson and his wife, my dear friend; by Southey, Coleridge, Wordsworth, etc. . . .

(6) [Undated but placed here by contents.]

(7) APRIL 1ST 1853. . . . In your estimate of the Bridge of Sighs—a disappointing title by the bye, and therefore to be regretted—I fully concur, even in censures which I would not have brought forward, but being uttered by you, or indeed any one, could not remove or contradict. Tho' as I am afraid, I have already said oftener than necessary, that I am infinitely more obliged to the critic who points out to me a beauty I might not have detected, than to him who makes me aware of a blemish I might have overlooked. Yet do not suppose me so excessively unwilling to see faults that I do not willingly receive and confess to be just, all the faults you find in Hood's marvellous poem. Far from it. I go further and think you have omitted just matter of reproach. . . . I agree with you that the liberties taken with the grammatical construction are excessive. The four lines commencing with 'Still for all slips of hers' want what is worse, I fear, than a grammatical construction—a logical connection. Why the lips are to be wiped 'for all slips' I do not see, and I have occasionally omitted those lines when reading. You have justly shown the abuse of the triple rhyme, and demanded for Wordsworth the preference to which he is entitled. . . .

. . . . Wordsworth himself in terms said that he thought he had more cause of complaint against the Quarterly than the Edinburgh. We can more easily forgive the open, rather ostentatious enemy, than the would-be-thought friend. . . .

(8) OCT. 10th–17th 1853. . . . A very amiable woman,¹ a Calvinistic Dissenter, who admiring the author nevertheless would not let her boys read it [Mrs. Leicester's School] till she had torn out The Young Mahometan and The Witch Aunt. When I told Lamb of this, he said: 'I am delighted to hear it; I wrote them both.' . . .

. . . As to Valentine Le Grice, I know a great deal more about him than I could bring within the compass of a letter. He is a remarkable man and so was his father before him. A native of my native town. . . . Val Le Grice is a strange man, one of those very clever unmanageable beings characterised in a couplet:

And some there are blessed with huge stores of wit
Who want as much again to manage it.²

² For whan a man hath over greet a wit,
Full oft hym happeth to mysusen it.

Chaucer, Canon Yeoman's Prologue, ll. 648–9.

I have heard Lamb tell odd stories about Le Grice, of whom the best to be said is that he overflowed with kindness to his fellow creatures, and was warm-hearted. He and Lamb loved each other, but Lamb confessed that he saw him ever with apprehension. And well he might.—They used to go to debating societies together—the same which I frequented years afterwards, and there made some of my most valuable friendships. They attended when the question was: Who is the greatest orator, etc.? Le Grice rose: 'I was once in company, Mr. Chairman, when a lady was asked which she liked best, veal, mutton, or beef. She answered: Pork. So, sir, your question asks: Who is the greatest orator, Burke, Pitt, or Fox? I answer Sheridan.' Another time on rising he said: 'Mr. Chairman, the last time I entered this room, I had the honour to be kicked out of it.' 'I was present,' said Lamb, 'and certainly he deserved it.' . . .

[PS.] . . . Mrs. Wordsworth is here at Henry Taylor's. She does not know you personally, but as the friend of her nephew, desires to be kindly remembered. We shall be going soon, that is in November, to see Mrs. Clarkson, the widow of the Slave-trade abolisher.

Mrs. Wordsworth is in good health apparently and is making a visit to a dear friend, Miss Fenwick—two pious women who consider this is a solemn leave-taking. She will, in my oldest friend Mrs. Clarkson, see one of her most esteemed friends. She will not go to see the statue [of the poet] in the artist's studio. . . .

(9) Nov. 22nd 1856. . . . What I love myself I am most anxious that all those I esteem should love also, considering love and enjoyment as the same. This led me to be a sort of martyr (I incurred the martyrdom of ridicule) in the cause of Wordsworth, but I have been amply rewarded by witnessing in old age the triumph of his poetical school. . . .

(10) SEPT. 3rd 1857.

Bury St. Edmunds.

My dear Sir,—It will give you pleasure, I have no doubt, to read that on a recent visit to Rydal I found dear Mrs. Wordsworth all I could wish and more than I could hope. It would seem burlesque to refer in speaking of a blind old woman of 88 to such an image as the phantom of delight, yet the weightier couplet:

A perfect woman, nobly planned
To warn, to comfort, and command, may still be brought to one's mind.

In her extreme old age she has attained an age not contemplated in those three stanzas to which I have referred, and exhibits a phase of existence worthy to be the sequel of those.—I spent nearly a week with her. During my stay I had frequent walks with her on the well-known terrace and read to her from her husband's poems—the reading in which she most delights.

During this stay, I never heard a syllable of regret pass her lips. She is the beau ideal of resignation. I probably related to you an anecdote. It is said that at the very last moment of his life, she was heard to whisper in his ear, 'You are going to Dora.' We may be sure therefore that in her calm submission she never forgets that she is going to William. The faithful James is still at Rydal and will not leave his mistress. She had her choice between her carriage and him and she retains him. She enjoys the perfect health of an octogenarian.

Not far from Rydal resides Mrs. Hutchinson and her daughters. They all speak of you with gratitude and affection as the friend and patron of their son and brother, the clergyman, and are expecting from his Northern Mission the other brother.

The chief changes I remark in this district are made by death. Those who depart have successors, but in the nature of things these must be for the present at least, inferiors, whatever they may become hereafter. The most remarkable of the residents is Mrs. Fletcher. . . . Mrs. Fletcher, older than Mrs. Wordsworth, has been eulogised by Lord Brougham with his characteristic force, and after years of comparative poverty and threatened with want, she became the leader of Edinburgh literary society, but in the time of Jeffrey's triumph was the almost single avowed admirer of the Lyrical Ballads. She exhibits the remains of great personal beauty, resembling Mrs. Barbauld, in whose house I saw her sixty years since.

There, too, is the widow of Dr. Arnold. She scarcely belongs to the same age—yet she has a son known as the author of a military novel of which the scene is in India. He is the head of the Educational Establishment in the Punjab, and Mrs. Arnold read to me a letter written early in the spring, before any outward symptom was exhibited of the catastrophe that has since burst out, in which, however, his apprehensions are clearly announced, and now assume the character of prophecy. Subsequent letters from him show that he is aware of the full extent of the peril, tho' it has not yet reached the district in which he lives. . . .

(11) JAN. 12th 1858. . . . You are aware probably that the placing of the Wordsworth monument has given great disgust to a large proportion of the most zealous promoters of the subscription. . . . The Queen gave £50 on condition that the monument to William Wordsworth should be placed in the Abbey. Nevertheless the Dean and Chapter extracted the full fee, as if the party represented had been a calico printer or Indian nabob. The precise sum I cannot now remember, but it was several hundred pounds—while the fee was remitted to those who placed Campbell's monument, I suppose in recognition of his higher merit! This is not all, but I have said more than enough.

I should like to know your opinion of the new edition. Your friend Mr. Johnston has had the advantage of connecting his own name honourably with that of the poet as Editor. . . .

(12) JUNE 4th [1858].

APPENDIX III

LETTERS OF CRABB ROBINSON TO SAMUEL NAYLOR, JUNIOR

The following seventeen letters from Crabb Robinson to Samuel Naylor, junior, are in the possession of S. Naylor's granddaughter, Mrs. Clifford Bax, who has allowed me to see and make extracts from them:

Jan. 1st 1851	March 8th 1854
April 19th 1851	Dec. 11th 1854
Oct. 30th 1851	June 29th [1855]
Jan. 27th 1852	Sept. 14th [1855]
Aug. 5th [1852]	Nov. 21st 1855
Sept. 8th 1852	March 26th 1859
Nov. 16th [1852]	Dec. 28th 1859
Dec. 25th 1852	June 23rd 1869
Oct. 14th [1853]

The years of the undated letters are proved by internal evidence.

(1) JAN. 1st 1851. . . . I need no motive beyond the mere love of excitement. Therefore I never suffer ennui. I shall be glad to hear that you can find as I can in mere reading a sufficient zest. To me the periodicals would supply almost enough of excitement. . . . Let me direct your attention to Fraser's Magazine . . . and in the year 1849 you will find some very clever papers entitled Yeast, a sort of novel—very like in character and perhaps better in execution than Alton Locke. The author is Kingsley, who fluctuates between sentimental religion and free-thinking. On leaving your house I fell in with the younger J. W. Parker, of West Strand, the publisher of Fraser—a clever young man. He, like Kingsley, etc., being trained in the Church school has broke bounds without being expelled the school. He belongs to an anomalous set, of which Julius Hare, Frederick Maurice, etc., are individuals. . . .

(2) SEPT. 8th 1852. . . . Here [Rydal] I came on Monday—intending to lie by as much as possible during the week I meant to spend here. But yesterday I could not help walking about eight miles not to see the fine lake of Grasmere or the sweet Rydal Water—here the scenery has always been subordinate to social feelings. And the loss of the great poet, to which has been added that of his son-in-law, Quillinan, renders this place in a great degree a place for mournful recollections. And here I have three most interesting persons all sharing my feelings concerning the departed, with whom I spend my time: Mrs. Wordsworth, Mrs. Arnold, Mrs. Fletcher, each in her own way most admirable. Mrs. Fletcher, in her eighty-third year, has the most vigorous nature of them all. . . .

I envy you the pursuit of fine art. It is that portion of it especially which you cultivate, which I am least incapable of relishing as it deserves—the art which in its highest form of excellence gives

To one brief moment caught from fleeting time
The appropriate calm of blest Eternity.

Ruskin thanked me for communicating this sonnet to him. I have conceived a very high opinion of this man, and am quite disturbed by his avowed disesteem of the greatest of landscape painters, if this be a correct announcement of his highest function—Claude Lorraine. . . .

(3) DEC. 25th 1852. . . . Mr. Rogers is now at Brighton. He is in his ninety-first year, and though a marvellous man in his way, yet no one now asks anything of him, beyond the repetition of an oft-repeated anecdote or joke. In several instances, and some more than a year ago, he undertook to do something which might be fairly expected of him, and from the not doing of which a loss was sustained in a cause in which he took an interest. But he forgot what he was to do, though the person to whom he was to speak was often at his elbow! . . .

(4) DEC. 11th 1854. . . . Of literature I have nothing to say within a writable or even readable compass. And yet there is much that is curious abroad. The most remarkable books now coming out are the collection of De Quincey's writings. Even his diseased malice cannot altogether take away the charm of his writings. . . .

EXCERPT FROM LETTER OF CRABB ROBINSON TO J. P. COLLIER

[By permission of Mr. R. W. Gibson, Antiquarian Bookseller, Oxford]

Nov. 26th 1856. . . . I found on my table 5 vols. to be read—all new.—Yours¹ excites the most interest both on account of the author and the subject. I expect great pleasure from half of yours. The portion assigned to a reprint I pass over.—The Preface I must not speak of unread, but as I presume it is controversial and in self-vindication, I wish it unwritten, for even the successful defence implies the having suffered injustice. . . .

A LIST OF LETTERS FROM CRABB ROBINSON TO THE PATTISSONS WITH EXCERPTS

[By permission of Mr. Martin Hardie]

Pattisson Correspondence

Volume 1, 1629-1805

(1) To Mrs. Jacob Pattisson, senior. Colchester, 6th April 1795.
H. C. Robinson has sent Mrs. Pattisson ¹ a round Dozen of Novels besides a Catalogue which Mrs. Pattisson will either purchase or return when she sends a Parcel as she thinks proper. Out of the List which Mrs. P. sent (which H. C. R. always carries in his Hand and selects from it as many Books as he can find) H. C. R. could only catch

The Emigrants. 3 vols.¹

Family Party. 3 vols.²

In order to complete a Parcel he has sent

Theagenes and Chariclea. 2 vols.³

which, in the Law Phrase, he Warrants Excellent, and recommends to Mrs. P.'s particular Attention.—And which was considered as a Work superior to Common Novels by the Reviewers. H. C. R. would have selected some Novels he read about 7 years ago, but he was fearful that he might pitch upon those Mrs. P. had read. He recollects The Fool of Quality ⁴ was then esteemed an eccentric Work. And Arundel ⁵ was lately recommended to him by a Young Woman of very distinguished Talents, Amelia Alderson [Opie] as a work of first-rate Merit.

² 1791. Both these novels are mentioned in the New Annual Register.

³ By Heliodorus. An Æthiopian History, translated by T. Underdowne. 1587. A fresh translation, anonymous, appeared in 1791.

⁴ By Henry Brooke. 1766.

⁵ By Richard Cumberland. 1789.

There are several Modern Novels which are now all the 'rage'—

Madeline.¹

The Weird Sisters.²

The Cyprists.³

which perhaps Mrs. P. might desire to see, but H. C. R. cannot recommend them himself as he has not during some Months read any Work of the kind. H. C. R. takes the Liberty of reminding Mrs. P. that Johnson's Rasselas and the Continuation of it called Dinarbas ⁴ rank highly in this Species of Composition. . . .

(2) To William Pattisson. Colchester, 4th May 1795.

. . . I suppose you have not yet seen The British Critic of the last Month which has reviewed the first Vol. of the Cabinet. [Here follows a summary of the criticisms which 'were in direct opposition to ours' as regards the essays, one by Charles Marsh. Crabb Robinson proceeds to give his own opinion on the various poems in the Cabinet, some of which he thinks 'would not disgrace Della Crusca.']

(3) To W. P. 25th April 1795.

[Consists in the main of an essay on The Profession of a Barrister, Section I: Morality as a Principle of Action. In a marginal commentary Crabb Robinson writes:] I claim no Originality of Idea. The greatest part of the reasoning is derived from Godwin and is an abridgement of his Morality; tho' I admit that my Ideas were received from him, I ought to observe that nothing has been taken from him verbatim. And tho' I had made an Analysis of the 1st vol. I did not refer to it when I wrote this Letter. There is also one point in which I differ totally from Godwin and he would be very severe upon the first part of my Letter. Godwin established the Origin of Moral Duty upon a Principle of Disinterestedness natural to Man (which by the bye appears to me consummate Nonsense.) He does not call to his Assistance a future State and is very severe upon the Self Love system.

(4) To W. P. 9th May 1795.

 . . . I will like a Knight Errant of the Days of Chivalry maintain that the fair beautiful and peerless System of Godwin is superior to all other systems. And I will defend with my Sword and Buckler its incomparable Worth. . . .
 (8) To W. P. Bury, 17th November 1795.
 Dear Pattisson.

Without scruple I confess that I wrote Philo-Godwin. I thought you would have discovered me before, for I had written it when you were in Bury, but as it had not then appeared in the Cambridge Intelligencer I kept it a secret. . . . I bar your excepting to a very obscure Passage where I had compared Paine with Godwin and where the Printers by omitting a Line converted a decent Parallel into Nonsense. . . .

 . . . Miss Hays lives in retirement, an highly respected character. She pursues literature as a profession; she does not estimate her productions above their value; she is content to be a useful writer and does not lose feminine excellence and virtues while she seeks literary fame. . . . I dined . . . with Mrs. Barbauld and to my admiration of her as a writer there is now associated a great personal regard for her. She is altogether without pretension and at the same time without the affectation of modesty which I should censure more. She speaks with decision and discrimination. . . . Dr. Aikin is a man of sharp understanding, but still, compared with his sister, he is in company what his Writings are compared with hers. . . .

(36) To W. P. and Mrs. W. P. London, 4th April 1806.
. . . I have been twice at Mrs. Barbauld's . . . and have every encouragement from her and Mr. B. to renew my visits. They both interest me exceedingly. I have seen her shew off. She reasons acutely tho' that is not her great excellence. The suaviter in modo is most peculiarly hers. She has the fortiter in re but in common with other superior persons of our Age. There is something repulsive in Dr. Aikin. . . . Lucy Aikin is the only member of the family I do not like. Every other person in it is on the whole amiable and interesting, for the something I have objected to in the Doctor, does not outweigh the conviction of his sense and integrity which every one will be persuaded of who sees the Doctor. . . .

(40) To W. P. London, 21st November 1807.
. . . I have looked into W. Hazlitt's answer to Malthus. It is rich in good things without being itself a good thing. It is acute, but pert; argumentative, but the argument is directed more against unessential parts of the book he writes against than against the system itself. It has not changed my opinion in the least as to the great question, tho' it has given great force and clearness to a number of correcting and qualifying remarks which had before occurred to me. There are many very light and censurable things in it, yet it is an amusing book. The concluding 2 pages is a piece of masterly eloquence.

I can at the same time recommend, however, another book of Hazlitt's from which you will all . . . receive great pleasure. It is his Abridgement of Tucker's Light of Nature, 1 vol. 8vo.¹ The preface has some of the best remarks I have ever seen on Kant's philosophy. Tucker's book itself is very curious indeed. I have read the Vision, which in spite of its oddities, is highly interesting. . . .

. . . If you want books I can with confidence recommend Plymley's Letters.¹ They will delight you, for they are on the right side and are written with great talent and humour. Since the barbarous Gothamite taste you betray in matters of poetry, I despair [sic] must deprive you of all interest in the persons of my favourite Poet[s], I shall only say in general that I have made the acquaintance of Wordsworth. He is an highly interesting man and has confirmed me in all my previous notions of the close connection of high moral excellence and the poetic character. I had long conversations with him on the subject of poetry and I wish I could be with you for a week were it only to deliver a few lectures to you on a subject which would interest me. I have also seen Southey and have been asked by Coleridge to go and see him. You see I am in with all of them. . . .

. . . You may if you please think Locke a great metaphysician and Pope a great Poet, you may laugh in your ignorance at Kant and refuse to understand and feel that Wordsworth has deep moral feeling and high poetic conceptions of man . . . and for all these heresies against good taste and sound philosophy I shall never be a whit displeased. . . . I am delighted that you are so much pleased with Miss Lamb's book. I shall give her your letter because it will give her pleasure. She is a very worthy woman indeed—a prime favourite with me as you know. . . .

(56) To W. P. and Mrs. W. P. London, 26th December 1810.

. . . There is generally a reciprocity of feeling. Love, esteem, friendship are mutual in most cases because they belong to the heart, while the opinion the judgment forms is self-subsistent. It does not follow that because I look upon any man, Coleridge for instance, as a genius that he must therefore think me a philosopher, tho' he will probably, if he is acquainted with my opinion, deem me a man of good sense and correct taste. Poor Coleridge! the name awakens a number of interesting reflections. How insufficient is mere genius for moral purposes, and what weakness and obliquity may not the finest and purest intellect permit the indulgence of, where the sedative of moral habits and severe principle are wanting! Coleridge dined with us on Sunday. He was the delight of a large party from half-past three till 12 o'clock. He discoursed of politics, metaphysics, and Shakespeare with equal brilliancy, yet I fear he will with all his infinite powers leave behind him no permanent record of a salutary exercise of his talents, unless he is to be considered, as perhaps the Greek philosophers were, a public instructor, a desultory educator of adults. And in this way he may, and I have no doubt does, scatter the seeds of wisdom wherever he appears.—But I know not how I have been led to digress on Coleridge. . . .

. . . I told Mrs. T[hornthwaite] when I wrote last, to recommend for your book-club Disraeli on the Calamities of Authors. It has very much amused me. . . . You will not suspect any insidious design on my part in praising it. I have never read a book which exhibits in a more impressive manner the 'follies of the wise.' It is a truly moral work and may be commended as a specific to all young people who are in danger of being seduced by the vain and meretricious attractions of literary glory. . . .

My admiration of her is great but very far indeed from being unqualified. . . . But nothing in her or her works fixes my love and admiration as the works of the Northern Poet continue to do. . . .

(78) To W. P. Jena, 7th February 1804.

fancy of his Master. But Mrs. Barbauld has added a new charm to the genuine Horatian grace of her mind and pencil by the gentle corrections and qualifications arising from the purer and juster morals of Christianity. By adding to the sober wisdom and chaste pleasantry of the Roman (of course I do not refer to the 8th and 12th Epodes [sic], etc.) the hopes and humane sentiments of Christianity, she has, if I may use the phrase, sanctified Horace.

. . . My last Witham visit was in no respect uncomfortable and the want of an entire sympathy in regard to the Poet and the Poem¹ only served to stimulate to a salutary exercise of reasoning and—forbearance. . . . To-day I received a letter from your friend Mr. Fox² of Chichester. He had indirectly applied to me for information about German books. I wrote to offer him the use of mine and I mentioned my late reading of the Poem to Hannah. In return he speaks of Wordsworth in terms of praise so discriminating that a friend of W.'s has taken the letter away to copy a part of it. I am satisfied with the progress the work is making. Half of the impression is already sold. You will be interested perhaps to hear that Montgomery is author of the Eclectic article. This Josiah Conder informed me, who is now the Editor of the review. I am glad that Montgomery did write that review. It is pleasing to observe free and even exuberant eulogy from a rival, who might be sooner than another tempted to 'damn with faint praise.' Hannah [Mrs. W. H. Pattison] will further be amused by hearing that I have heard of Hogg, the author of the Queen's Wake. He has been visiting Wordsworth, who entertains great respect for his talents. Hogg is, like Burns, a genuine peasant. But he is prudent. With all his simplicity of character and habits, still a Scotchman in the main. He thinks Jeffrey the greatest living writer, and the late Edinburgh review of his work appears to have been an exchange of eulogy. Further I have to inform you that I have seen a proof sheet of Wordsworth's new edition of his Poems. It will be a very beautiful work as to its outward form and substance. He has condescended to adorn many of his poems, but has sturdily refused to exclude any one.

I hear from everyone so high a character of Southey's Don Roderick,¹ that I think you may venture to buy it for your book-club: on the other hand, The Lord of the Isles is less talked of than I expected. The fact undoubtedly is that Lord Byron has put Scott's nose out of joint—and no wonder, for what is popularity but a system of favouritism? Possibly Scott's concealment of himself, if he be really the author of Waverley, is a prudent policy. Wordsworth, I hear, is a great admirer of Waverley, and he ascribes it also to Scott. . . .

My love to [the boys] when you write. I have been buying for them Miss Edgeworth's Moral and Popular Tales. . . . Perhaps with your usual precaution you may like to read them first. I would recommend Forester and L'Amie Inconnue as very excellent; but I think the moral of both somewhat equivocal. However, it is not the sort of doubtful morality you will censure. . . .

Wordsworth has done me the honour, and I truly feel it as such, to send me a copy of the work, in which I shall take a heightened and extended delight. But I have been so busy for these few days that I hardly know what the fresh treat amounts to. I have read some half dozen admirable sonnets on politics. . . .

. . . I take for granted you know that Talfourd is now a licensed special pleader. . . . Perhaps he is a little anxious about his success. I wish it were in my power to assist him. . . . I believe T. to be a very competent pleader. . . . It is much easier to recommend and bring forward a pleader than a barrister. . . .

. . . During my stay at Bury and on the Sessions journey I read a novel which pleased me very much indeed. If you have not read it I could recommend it to you confidently—Pride and Prejudice.¹ The merit lies in the perfect truth of the painting. The dialogue is exquisitely in character and the characters, tho' not ideal, are charming. The women especially are drawn after the life and Mrs. Bennet is a very jewel—equal to any of Ostade or Gerard Dou's portraits, and these you know are not prized for the beauty of the originals. Mr. Collins too, the sneaking and servile parson, is quite a masterpiece. The heroines (for there are a brace of them) are as natural as beauties can be and as beautiful as any successful portrait can be. . . . Since my return I have been reading, however, a still better book that you have probably already read—The Heart of Midlothian.² If not, read it directly. You were offended and with reason by the former Tales of my Landlord, for the tendency was not good certainly, tho' I think the author held up with perfect truth and impartiality at the same time the heroic virtue which religious feelings produce, to our admiration, and the horrid crime to which religious fanaticism leads. But in this book he has made the amende honorable to the Scotch pietists or Cameronians. Old douce David may be put in comparison with the Reverend Mr. Primrose as a sort of Christian hero, and his exalted virtues are only thrown into relief by the human alloy. His narrow-mindedness and intolerance are rendered amusing only and excite no resentment in a character so scrupulously conscientious and upright. And I should have the lowest opinion of the understanding of a Unitarian who did not enjoy the fine characteristic speech in which Socinian vermin are spoken of with a contempt and horror quite boundless. Jeanie Deans too, the perfect heroine, loses none of our admiration because she, in the simplicity of her heart, doubts whether she can without sin enter a church where is an organ, or hear the word of God spoken by a man with a surplice on, and considers it as an 'awfu' thing' that there are so many prelatists in the city with the 'muckle kirk.' Swift said with truth, and I fear he was himself an instance, 'men have religion enough to hate and not enough to love each other,' and I think it one of the most laudable and useful of literary tasks to exhibit that excellence we all love and admire in combination with infirmities which we ought to learn to tolerate. This is not the only quality which renders this new Tale of my Landlord eminently moral. The conclusion of Effie Deans's history is very instructive. . . .

My dear friend,

I meant to send the accompanying Volumes long ago. But there has been blundering in their being forwarded to me. Mrs. Jacob Pattisson will find an autograph of the great poet in the last Volume. The Volumes of Lamb's letters will excite your pity as well as admiration, tho' Talfourd has shewn great skill in the throwing into shade what, in a prominent light, would have wounded the feelings of survivors and friends or provoked the sneers or reproaches of the unfriendly. Wordsworth says it is the only book of the kind he knows, executed with delicacy and judgment. Hereafter there may be large additions.—Mary Lamb, I rejoice to say, has been long in quiet good health. She shewed me her brother's grave a few days ago with composure and something like cheerfulness. . . .

(120) To J. P. Rydal, 1st January 1846.
 . . . Here I have been enjoying myself in spite of very bad weather. There is congregated here a variety of talent and moral excellence quite astonishing in a place of so small population. To say nothing of the poet or any other males, the females alone form a singular delightful society. Here are Mrs. Wordsworth and her pious and benignant friend Miss Fenwick, and Mrs. Arnold, the worthy helpmate and survivor of the Doctor; Mrs. Fletcher, for many years the most distinguished member of Edinburgh society . . . and her two daughters, Mrs. Davy . . . and Miss Fletcher, also an authoress, and of recent accession, Harriet Martineau, who by her benevolence and generosity and activity of mind has conciliated the friendship of everyone in spite of Unitarianism and Mesmerism. . . .

(121) To J. P. London, 17th January 184[9].
 . . . I have begun to read Macaulay's very eloquent history. He has not abandoned the principles of political philosophy in which he was brought up, nor lost his love of civil and religious liberty. . . . You will be glad to hear that I found Mr. Wordsworth's mind in a much healthier state than it was last year. He has learnt to submit to the will of Providence in the loss of his daughter. Both he and Mrs. Wordsworth are in good health. . . .

(122) To J. P. London, 22nd July 1847.

(123) To J. P. Bury, 30th July 1850.
 . . . My wish has been to be at Rydal. Mrs. Wordsworth has pressed my going to meet Miss Fenwick, and my intention is to go without losing a day the moment I am released from hence. . . .

(124) To J. P. (death of W. P.) Leeds, 12th January 1848.
 . . . Poor Wordsworth cannot bear up against the insupportable grief he feels for the death of his daughter. I was with him three weeks, during which time I was seldom able to withdraw his mind from the moody abstraction in which it seems to be from all present objects. This doubles Mrs. Wordsworth's affliction. But she is able to talk of this sorrow, the loss of her dear child. . . . I will, however, tell you an anecdote of Wordsworth's man-servant James, born a parish boy, who has lived all his days in servitude, a character of whom I will one day tell you more. Expressing my sorrow that Mr. W. was unable to submit, he said: 'Ah, Sir, so I took the liberty to say to him, and then master said: "Oh, but she was such a bright creature." And then I said: "But don't you think she is brighter now than she ever was?" And then he burst into a flood of tears.'

'These could not have been tears of unmingled grief. But James's answer may match with any to be found in the sayings of eminent men. . . .

I have been looking over the volume of letters [from himself to the Pattissons] this morning.—It is not like the volume which I saw on Talfourd's drawing-room table—a bound collection of all the complimentary letters written on Ion and which therefore it was intended everyone should read. . . . I am surprised at the small number of letters from myself.⁴ . . . There is no letter between 1802 and 1813, nor between 1817 and 1830. . . .

The subscription now, I understand, amounts to little more than £600 which will never suffice for a full length. Nor do I expect that the further subscriptions will be sufficient unless the Dean and Chapter remit the fee they usually demand for the licence to put up a full length—£300—which they probably will do out of respect to him. . . .

. . . I did not go down to Westmorland to attend the funeral. Indeed the interment took place on the Saturday, and I should have scarcely had time. But I find I was expected and therefore I regret my absence. But in the first letter the time was not mentioned and I therefore inferred that I was not expected.

The grief of friends ought to be absorbed in the contemplation of the public loss, and yet the public of to-day will be the immediate gainers. There will be published forthwith *THE POEM*² which perhaps for the earnest and contemplative few of the present and future generations will be the most precious of the great man's works. In 14 books Wordsworth has recorded the formation of his character. This was written when his mind was in all its strength.

Dr. Christopher Wordsworth is commissioned to prepare brief memorials in illustration of his poems, and a short biography. I should have been better pleased had the task been given to Mr. Quillinan. For I fear there will be an inclination to press the great poet into the service of High Churchism. But this is not easy to do. There is at all events the sonnet Young England which is a bar in the way. Wordsworth henceforward will be classed with our English classics.

It will afford you satisfaction to know that Mrs. Wordsworth has sustained this great trial as a Christian heroine should. She attended the funeral at which was a very large collection of the neighbours. This is the custom of the country. I am expected to go soon and I shall. . . . The notices of the public press have been creditable to the country[']s literature, at least as far as I have yet seen the papers. The best I have yet seen has been that of the Inquirer. I believe Mrs. Wordsworth will be gratified by it and acknowledge its Christian character though it is by a Unitarian. It is a curious fact that the Unitarians and the High Church have been among his warmest admirers. This power of uniting extremes in one common sentiment of love and admiration is an evidence of a catholicity of character. . . .

PS. I have had a letter from Mrs. Wordsworth since I wrote the above. She writes with great composure.

APPENDIX VII

INDEX TO MENTIONS OF (I) WRITERS AND (II) BOOKS IN THE VOLUMES OF CRABB ROBINSON'S CORRESPONDENCE AT DR. WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY

(This includes a List of Letters written to him by English Authors.)

I. WRITERS

CRABB ROBINSON'S correspondence and papers are preserved at Dr. Williams's Library (i) in thirty-two volumes arranged chronologically, and (ii) in eight Miscellaneous Bundles.

The following index is therefore twofold in its method. In the case of the bound volumes, references are arranged in four columns which give: (1) the date of the letter—this indicates the volume in which it occurs, except where otherwise stated (e.g. 1848 in 1847 volume); (2) the number of the letter in that volume; (3) the page of the letter; (4) the number of the line in the page, unless it is the last, when it is so designated, 'last seq.' means 'last line subject continued overleaf.' In references to the Miscellaneous Bundles the actual letters or figures given conform to the Library numbering which is not consistent. In the index the first column gives the date of the letter without any indication where it may be found. The second column gives the number of the bundle and letter in accordance with the Library procedure whatever that may be (e.g. 3 A 32 is Bundle 3 A, letter 32; 2 IV K is Bundle 2, subsection IV, letter K). The third and fourth columns, as in the case of references to the bound volumes, contain information as to page and line in the letter. It should further be noted that under the sub-heading LETTERS, i.e. where reference is to the complete letter, the third and fourth columns are ignored, and in cases in which more than one letter occurs in any one year the references run on across the columns, thus:

1836	100; 134
1839	10; 19; 23; 26; 42;
	49; 57; 69

The only references to Crabb Robinson's correspondence with the Wordsworth family printed here are those found to have been accidentally omitted from The Correspondence of Henry Crabb Robinson with the Wordsworth Circle, which contains a full index to the papers in this series preserved at Dr. Williams's Library.

GENERAL INDEX

Since the whole book consists of Crabb Robinson's opinions and criticisms on Books and Their Writers, these are not separately indexed under his name. His criticisms of a book he is reading so often lead him from the subject of the book itself to comment on the character of the author, that his more important personal opinions may generally be found among the references to an author's works.

'The following signs should be noted :

[] indicate information supplied by the editor.

() indicate a paraphrase in the text, e.g. 'Biographia Literaria' appears on p. 182 as 'two volumes of Miscellanies,' on pp. 200 and 210 as Coleridge's 'Memoirs,' and on p. 213 as 'Coleridge's book.'

|| indicates a typographical, spelling or other error in the text, e.g. '|| Lawrence, James Henry, poem,' in the index indicates a correction of 'Laurence, The Knight of Malta,' p. 646; '|| Parken, 55, 85, 87, 88' in the index indicates that 'Parker,' p. 55, and 'Parkin,' p. 85, should read 'Parken' throughout.
